Management and Leadership

INTRODUCTION

Leadership still remains the single most powerful driver of Organisational performance. It is therefore quite challenging to note that while everything has been changing, leadership style, context and perspectives have been lagging behind as we commence entry into the Fourth Industrial Revolution.

We see the improved need for Emotional Intelligence in leadership, but what seems to be lacking is the introduction of a growing body of scientific research into neuroscience that is changing everything we know about motivation, supervision and communication.

Furthermore, we see that leadership is becoming more about bandwidth that it is about specialization. Participants will learn new ways to perceive and simulate leadership insights of the past and be introduced to new insights and research that allows leadership to be designed to meet the occasion rather than the traditional one size-fits-all, leading to better performance and results in the marketplace. Participants leave this training better able to lead men and point resources at achieving strategic outcomes.

TAKEAWAYS

This program will enable you to:

- Create an organization where leadership is flexible enough to adapt as a factor of production in the marketplace
- See leadership in a new light and understand that leadership now has a new metric which is the ability to release human energy
- Multiply the impact of legacy and emerging relationships, systems and strategies throughout an organization
- Lead an organization where new ideas and congruent communication is encouraged, supported, and promoted

WHO SHOULD ATTEND

- Senior leadership, whose understanding and support are vital in developing the discovery capacity within an organization
- Managers with responsibility for core products, services, or mission-critical processes
- Managers being groomed for higher responsibility within the organisation
- Entrepreneurs in any industry, especially in new and emerging fields seeking exponential growth

The customised nature of the training made it practical and specific to our organisation. We were able to achieve deep-dive and solve real-life organisational problems that would not have been possible otherwise. Every one left with renewed vigour and a set of solutions to immediately implement.
