INTRODUCTION

When asked what their jobs are most managers immediately start talking about their functions. It is the responsibility of the Leadership to let them know that the number one job of every member of staff is to make the company the best at what it has chosen to do, whether that be product leadership, market leadership, constant innovation and hundreds of other strategic objectives.

This can only be achieved by helping them understand the role of High-Impact Teams to get things done without overlaps, delays, politics or the hugging of resources and information. Middle to top level management will be taught the characteristics of High-Impact Teams, the psychology of selecting the right team members, the dynamics of leading these teams, and the psychology of communication, permission, supervision and support needed to make each team within the organisation a true asset to ward achieving organisational goals. Participants will learn the skills needed to create, participate in and lead these teams in practical ways that immediately affect organisational performance.

TAKEAWAYS

This program will enable you to:

- Create an organization where work is accomplished by harnessing the best approaches, and the need for new knowledge is recognized
- Lead an organization where teamwork is encouraged, and in the process make the company future-proof
- Harness the power of peer-based motivation and supervision to meet targets in the best possible way
- Solve entrenched problems and develop an understanding that prevents the recurrence of those problems

WHO SHOULD ATTEND

- Senior leadership, whose understanding and support are vital in developing organization-wide High-Impact Teams
- Managers with responsibility for core products, services, or mission-critical processes and tasks
- Internal Consultants and Managers identified for higher responsibility

The customised nature of the training made it practical and specific to our organisation. We were able to achieve deep-dive and solve real-life organisational problems that would not have been possible otherwise. Every one left with renewed vigour and a set of solutions to immediately implement.
